

McLAUGHLIN COLLEGE

As part of our popular Lunch Talk series, McLaughlin College Proudly Presents:

Violence Against Indigenous Women: The Past, Present, and Future

This talk will focus on the history of how colonialism and governments have affected the indigenous peoples, the current situations they face, how these problems have turned into violence among their women, and what the future will bring. From the student's personal research as well as some words from selected qualified speakers, attendees will be part of an eye-opening experience to what the indigenous women have gone through, continue to go through, and learn how they can become part of the movement to ending violence against indigenous women once and for all.

Kristina McCutcheon, Nasha Ahmed, Alicia Zapa, Nicole Patimisco, Julia Black, Elite Hasson, and Latoya Green are a group of students who have been learning about indigenous resistance, as well as the history of violence and oppression against their women, and working alongside the Anduhyaun Women's Shelter as part of a course here at York University. The course work and volunteering among the aboriginal women have made us more aware, knowledgeable, and outstandingly passionate for this sensitive subject.
